

- ▶ Financial markets started the week with a low-volume session because of Martin Luther King holiday in the U.S. The main event was the release of January's IMF World Economic Outlook, which projected an acceleration of global GDP from 2.9% in 2019 to 3.3% this year (a 0.1pp downward revised figure from October's WEO).
- ▶ By regions, euro area and U.S. 2020 GDP were revised 0.1pp downwards to 1.3% and 2%, respectively. Within advanced economies, Spain's 2020 GDP was the most revised (from 1.8% in October to 1.6%). Although EM GDP in 2020 and 2021 is expected to accelerate substantially (4.4% and 4.6%, respectively), both figures were revised 0.2pp downwards.
- ▶ In this context, yields on sovereign bonds and stock indices in the euro area ticked down. In oil markets, the barrel of Brent fluctuated around $65.
- ▶ Today, investors will focus on Germany's January ZEW survey, which the consensus expects will increase.
